

ENOTAH 1970
Young Harris College
Young Harris, Georgia
Volume 45

Through experiencing nature we are forced to recognize the depth or shallowness of our own experience.
We are forced to choose life over existence or feel guilty in our mockery of it.

The Duckworth Libraries
Young Harris College
Young Harris, Georgia

Trees are the thoughts stemming from the mind of the mountains.
Beside them, our own grow deeper.
We see our ideas and ideals take root and grow with them,
becoming concrete symbols of our constant striving for knowledge of ourselves and others.

We seek knowledge with a passion equal only to that with which we sustain life. In essence the two are one, and the One veils itself within the mysteries of nature.

The coldness of winter snow brings out all the warmth in human hearts, as if we were trying by smiles and greetings to thaw one another's frozen hands and noses.

Youth personifies the truth told by the tragic beauty of autumn leaves; fiercely glorious in their moment of life, but destined by inexorable fate to be ephemeral.

The mountains grip us, not always gently. They are aged, yet possess undying strength; old men who may laugh with sad wisdom at the dreams of youth. The mountains know, and we both love and fear their knowledge. They comfort us with their timelessness, yet disturb us by revealing our own mortality.

When all else is gone from a constantly-changing world, there will still be the mountains. The mountains do not know time: they are the only part of existence that can laugh at the power of time.

Dedication

To teach, a man must first know. And the deepest knowledge is that gained through touch, friendship, and communication. For his seeking of this priceless knowledge and for his honest teaching of it to those students whose lives he has touched, we dedicate the 1970 Enotah to Todd Kimsey.

EPILOGUE

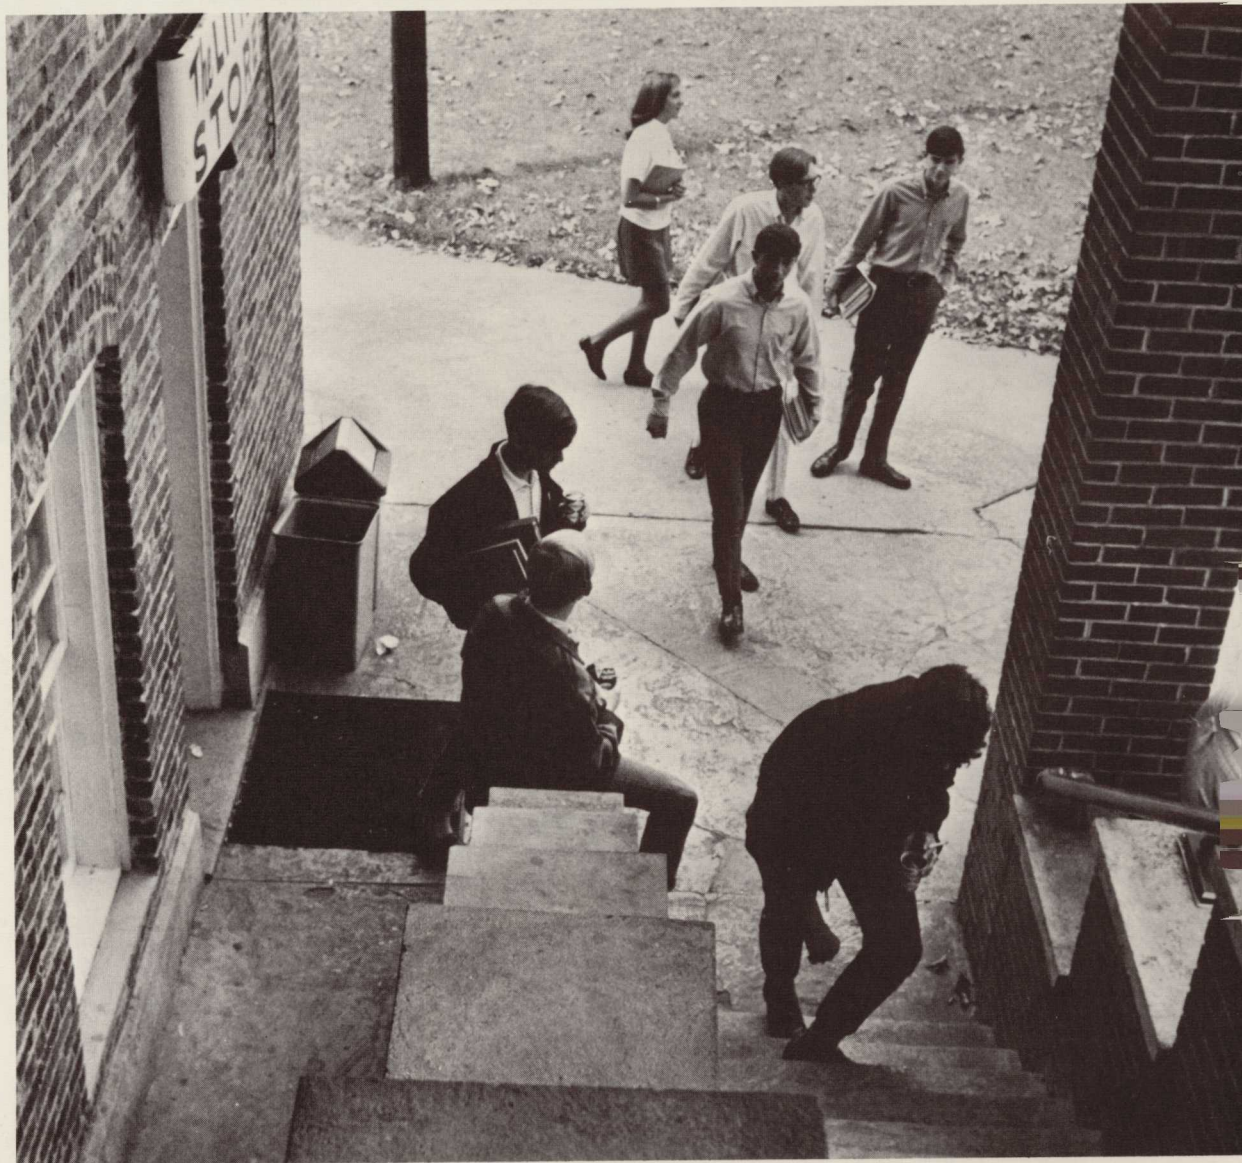

Walking is slow; it may be blind as well. There is an eternity in which to contemplate the significance of the thing passed; but it takes only a moment to elude our grasp if we turn our heads and quicken our pace.

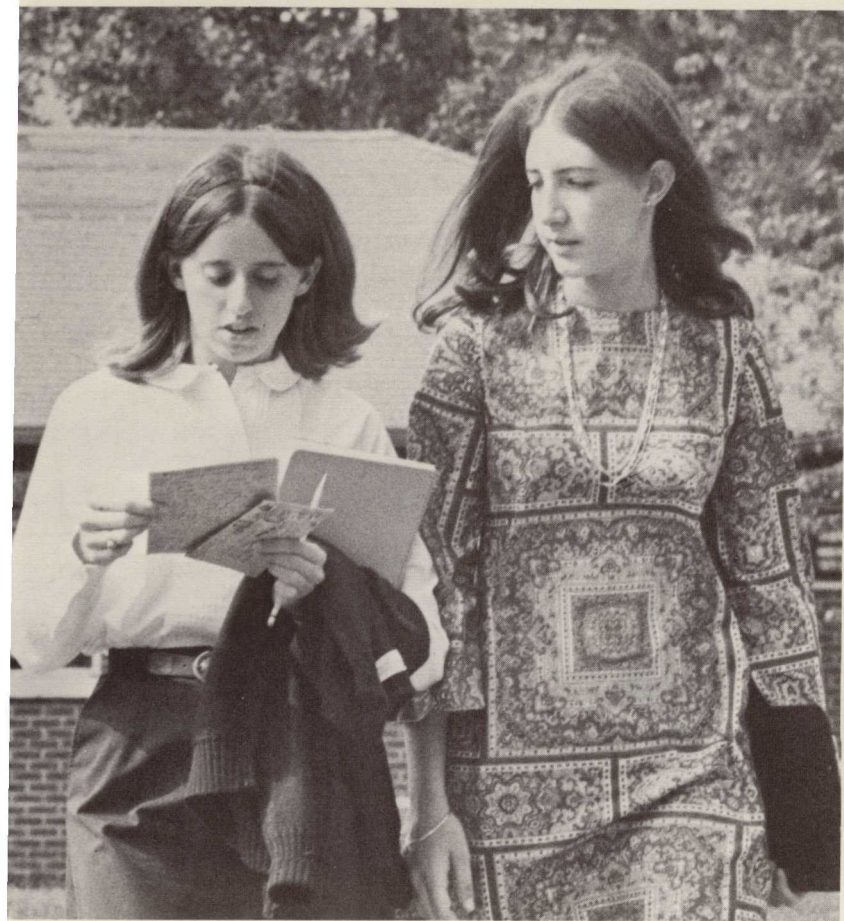

A time for discovery—for grasping life with both hands and hanging on as it takes you on a dizzy roller-coaster ride over the heights of ecstasy, into the depths of loneliness.

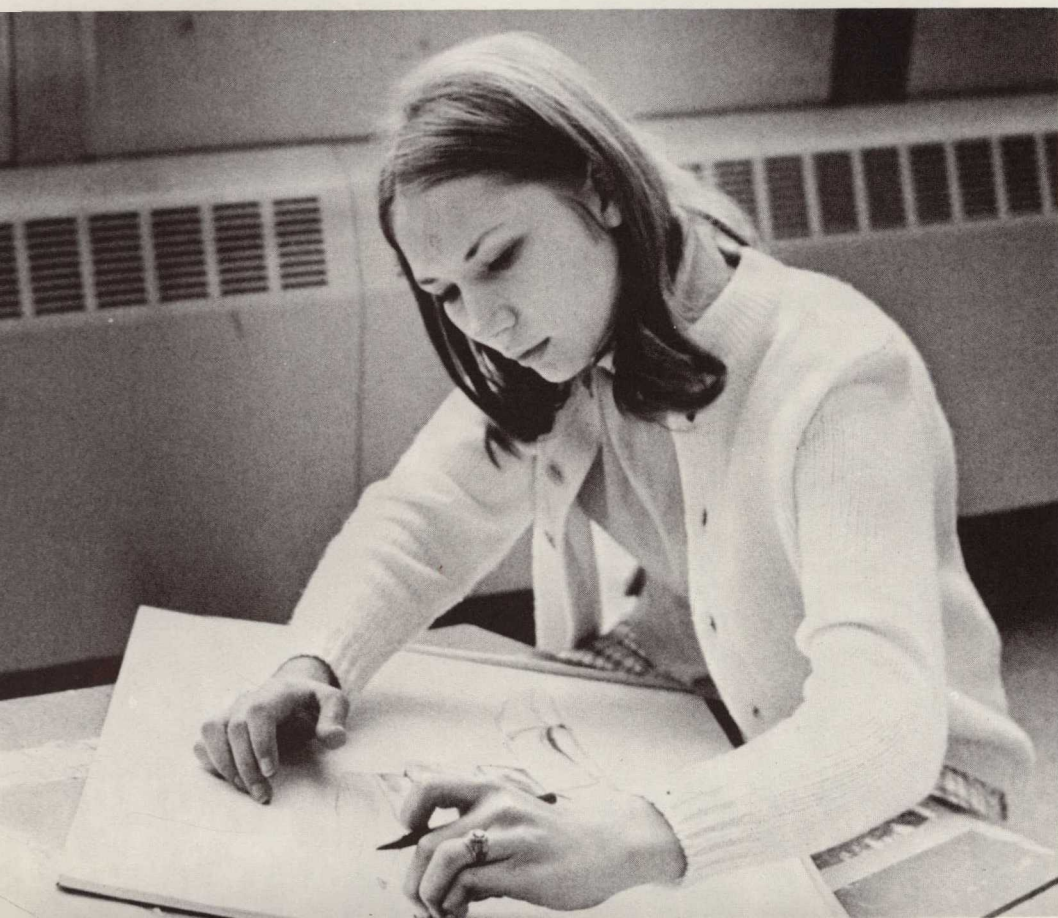

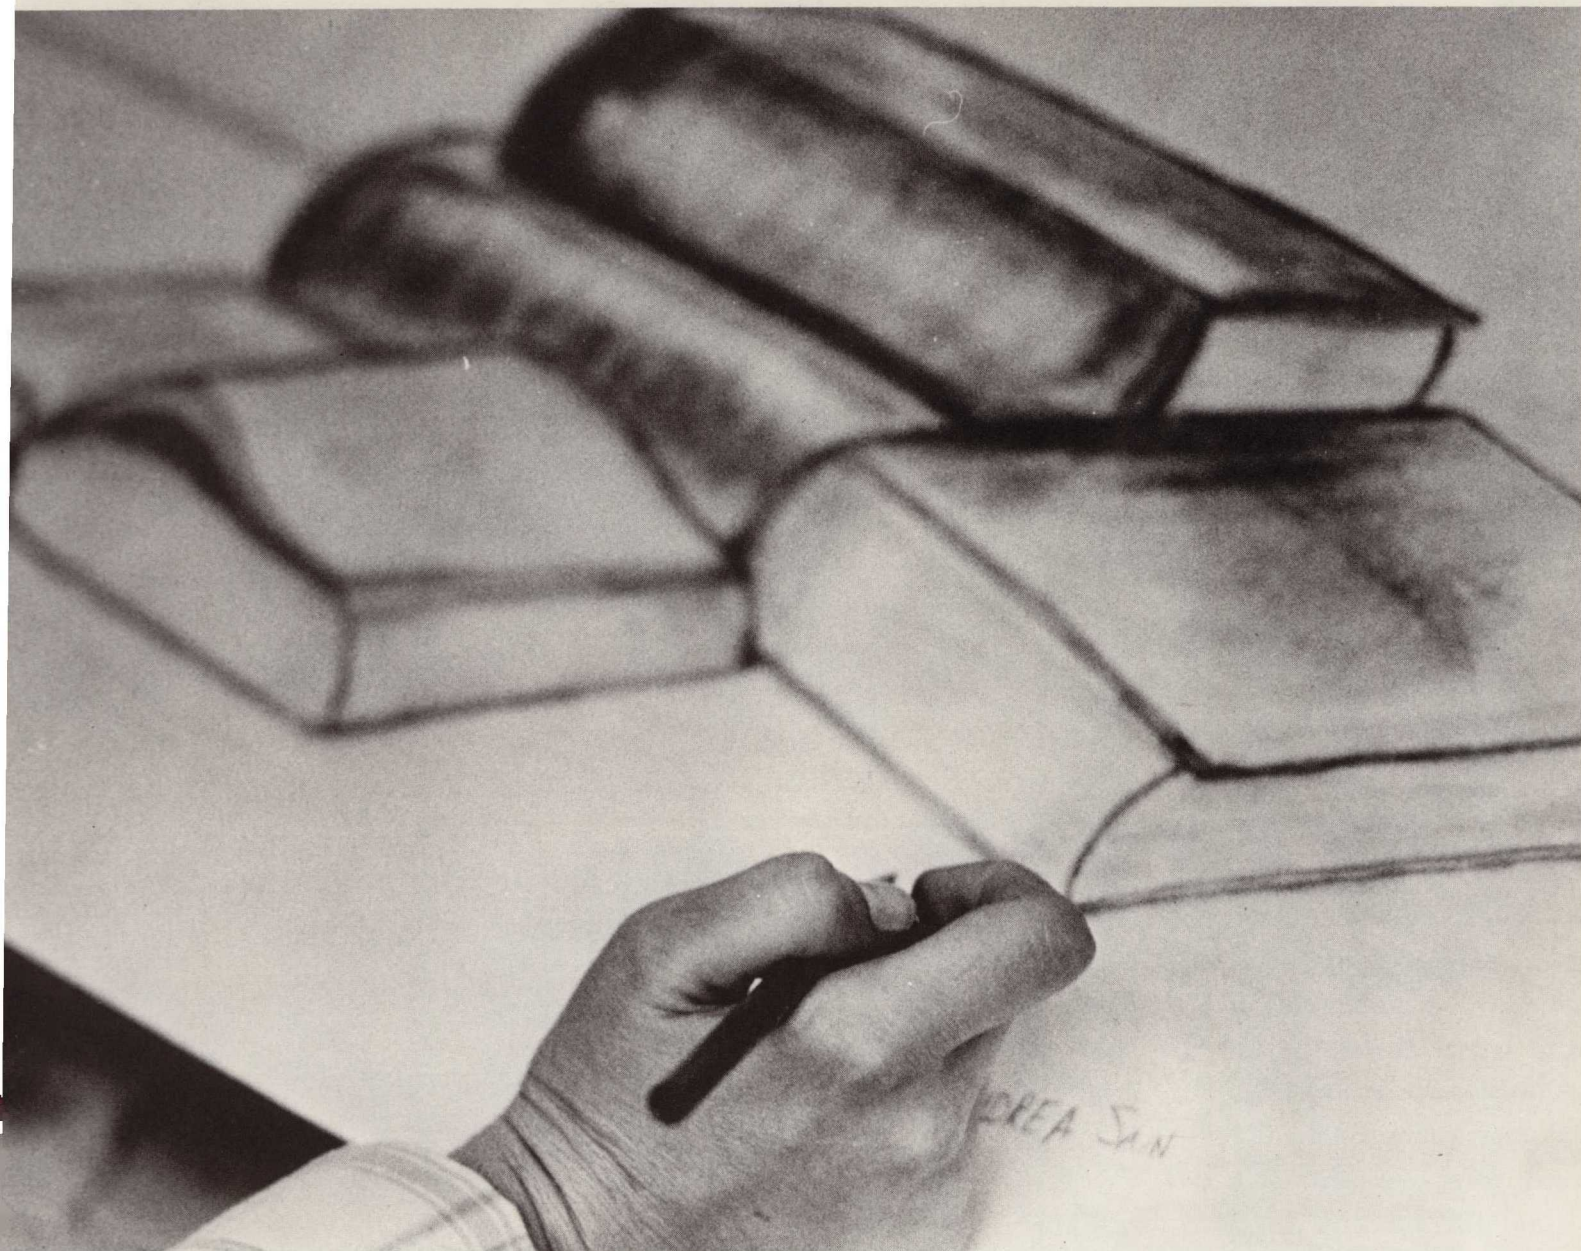

The seeking out of kindred minds brings together a few into closed, small circles; the many are outside, forming different circles of few, each excluding all others. And there-in is the tragedy of human relationships.

The artist is he who works to bring cohesiveness to a universe in which opposing forces work to destroy one another, and destruction is the order of nature. The artist is an aberrant: he works to recreate nature, to form an order which he can accept, to make of the universe a unified creative mind. The artist's daimon is paradoxical: it is the product of clashing forces, yet works to resolve those clashes which gave it life.

There is a fountain of age more precious than the much-sought one of youth could ever be. At this fountain we see ourselves grow and change, becoming more constantly aware, more understanding and wise. At this fountain we drink the nectar of thought and let the cool waters of truth flow through our fingers. At this fountain we stand proudly and somewhat sadly, watching the sunlight of honest searching sparkle on the brilliant, brief droplets of our lives sprayed into the air by the forces of destiny.

There are always beginnings, and never endings. What seems to be the completion of one phase of life is an introduction to the next. Many rivers flow into the sea which is one soul's span, but the rivers do not stop—they join together.
